

Hauptman & Hauptman Interviewed On CBS Television

- Hauptman & Hauptman, guiding families through life's transitions -

Livingston, NJ – Yale S. Hauptman, Founding Partner, Hauptman & Hauptman, PC, was interviewed on CBS News. The conversation focused on the coronavirus stimulus checks being sent to people who had previously passed away.

The segment, led by Maurice DuBois and Lisa Rozner, discussed the uncertainty surrounding these stimulus checks and the implications for the families of these deceased individuals. The discussion continued on the various elements of the Coronavirus Aid Relief and Economic Security Act known as the CARES Act. The IRS has documented a delay in receiving death records from the social security administration.

"According to Hauptman, "I had received calls from clients who were alive at the time the Act was passed but subsequently died prior to the dissemination of these checks. This has resulted in confusion of what families should do moving forward with this money."

Yale S. Hauptman is licensed both in New Jersey and New York. His practice is focused on elder, estate, and special needs law. He has personally helped thousands of families plan for the complicated and emotional journey through the long-term care process. Yale writes and speaks extensively on elder, estate and special needs law topics, has been featured in both local and national media and has been quoted in print and digital media outlets. Additionally, Yale presents elder law topics to legal, financial, insurance and health care professional organizations as well as to the general public. He is also a published author of an eldercare book entitled, "Be Nice To Me-I Pick Your Nursing Home." Yale teamed up with his partner and wife, Laurie A. Hauptman, Esq., and nationally acclaimed speaker and financial advisor, Don Quante, for his book, "Don't Go Broke in a Nursing Home", a consumer's real-life hands-on guide to long-term care, including Medicaid eligibility, Veterans benefits, and new ways to "self-fund" your care without going broke.

Laurie A. Hauptman is a New Jersey and New York licensed attorney who has concentrated her practice on estate, elder and special needs law for over 20 years. Additionally, Laurie is a Department of Veterans Affairs' accredited attorney for the preparation, presentation, and prosecution of claims for veterans' benefits. She has been intrinsically involved with helping thousands of families navigate the circuitous and emotional journey through the long-term and special needs process. Laurie was a trial attorney in a litigation firm before joining forces with her husband, Yale. Her courtroom experience is essential to handling the firm's court work, including guardianships, conservatorships and special needs trusts. Civically and community-minded, she is a member of the United Way Caregivers Coalition Steering Committee, Co-Chairperson of the Elder and Disability Law Committee of the Essex County Bar Association and a frequent lecturer on estate, special needs, and elder law planning topics.
